Students pay the cost tte and then receive housing and meals abroad, b) pay the host university or program directly, r d) a combination (such as pay room to Willamette and pay for food abroad).

- Additional costs are very important to consider! Additional costs may include, but are not limited to:
  - passport - renewal or new
  - airfare and travel to/from the program site
  - visa and/or residency permit costs (when applicable) - this may include application fees and postage
  - domestic travel to apply for visa (when applicable)
  - additional health insurance, depending on individual program structure and individual student needs
  - travel insurance (optional)
  - local transportation (when applicable)
  - Generally, students spend more out-of-pocket money while abroad than during a typical semester at Willamette. These costs are usually associated with extra leisure travel, cost-of-living differences, eating out, entertainment, and purchasing gifts and souvenirs. If you would like more information about specific costs of the items mentioned above and/or the general affordability of study abroad, please contact an advisor in the OIE.
  - See the Willamette University Sponsored Programs Cost Matrix for Special Cost Considerations specific to your program(s).
- Study Abroad Acceptance Deposit : [paused for 2023-24] Non-refundable deposit is due when you accept your placement to participate on a Willamette Sponsored Program. The deposit applies towards the term of your program abroad.

Summer Program Costs - section at the end of Matrix

Summer study abroad program costs are treated differently than semester and year-long programs. Each program has a set program fee based on actual costs associated with the program (this may include items such as tuition, room/board, local transportation, excursions and insurance). The cost for each program is determined each year based on the current rates for services and n2.3 (nd)aa 3 (s)-8e3usHealth Insurance Information:
