

Word count: 1998

Author's name: J. M. Fritzman

Academic status: Associate Professor

Institutional affiliation: Lewis & Clark College

Mailing address: J. M. Fritzman
Philosophy Department
Lewis & Clark College
0615 SW Palatine Hill Road
Portland
OR 97219-7899

Email address: fritzman@lclark.edu

Telephone number: 503-768-7477

Title: Nussbaum On Cosmopolitanism Patriotism

Abstract: I criticize Nussbaum's views on cosmopolitanism and patriotism

In articulating the relation between the universal and the local, Nussbaum turns to the ancient Stoics. She writes:

The Stoics stress that to be citizens of the world one does not need to give up local identifications, which can be a source of great richness in life. They suggest that we think of ourselves not as devoid of local affiliations, but as surrounded by a series of concentric circles. The r ethical obligations humans have for other humans, in virtue of their being human. She does not ask what obligations citi

Nussbaum On Cosmopolitani

Nussbau

those who claim that they are Hindus first, there are resources in Hinduism itself to articulate such a response.

WORKS CITED

Appiah, Kwame Anthony.